COURSE DESCRIPTION:

In this seminar students will review the process of integrating theory and practice related to theological field education. Presentations and readings will address models, insights, and examples that are a part of theological reflection. The seminars will integrate faith formation and ministry development, (personal and spiritual formation). Theological reflection requires a thorough grounding in one’s faith tradition; hence, we will address sources of authority, history, theology and spirituality in the Catholic tradition, (religious heritage). This seminar is suited both to those preparing for ministry and those engaged in the ministry of assisting others in reflecting theologically on their ministry experiences. These experiences will serve to build their sense of leadership and prepare them for diverse ministries, (ministry and public leadership). These ministry experiences will expose students to a variety of cultural and social situations, (cultural context).

CLASS OBJECTIVES:

To foster within participants the practice of reflecting theologically both personally and in their practice of ministry.
To encourage critical reflection on the nature and roles of theological reflection in ministry and in faith development.
To identify the attitudes, postures, and practices which foster personal theological reflection, and how they promote a deepening faith.
To become acquainted with various models and occasions for theological reflection in ministry, particularly as they relate to the supervisory process and in assisting others in reflecting theologically.
To experience reflecting theologically as it relates to various occasions in ministry and in one’s own spiritual development.
